1 // Retrieve all users
2 const allUsers: User[] = await prisma.users()
3
4 // Retrieve a single user by email
5 const bob: User = await prisma
6   .users({ email: "bob@prisma.io" })
7
8 // Retrieve all comments of a post in a single request
9 const commentsOfPost: Comment[] = await prisma
10  .post({ id: "cj14srkaqqxa30b46pqcyzpyo" })
11  .comments()

At the bottom, there are three tabs: 'Basic Reads' (selected), 'Filtering & Sorting', and 'Declarative Transactions'. A footer message at the bottom states: 'We use cookies and similar tools to analyze the usage of our site and give you a better experience. You consent to our cookies and similar tools if you click on "Agree" and continue to use our site. Read our Privacy Policy for more information.' with an 'Agree' button.
